Letter of Recommendation for Mr. Alin Sever

April 2026

I am pleased to provide this letter of recommendation for Mr. Alin Sever, whom I had the privilege of supervising directly over several years at both Public Services and Procurement Canada (PSPC) and Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC).

I first managed Alin from July 2019 to October 2021 in the HR-to-Pay sector at PSPC. During this period, he consistently distinguished himself as a highly professional, thoughtful, and exceptionally practical analyst. Alin is naturally quiet in the best sense of the word, measured, observant, and deliberate, yet highly strategic in how he approaches problems and delivers results. He is resourceful, operationally grounded, and focused on producing solutions that are both sustainable and immediately useful to clients and decision-makers.

At PSPC, Alin made significant contributions to reporting modernization and automation. Notably, he developed new automated reporting tools, including the comprehensive Pay Pod report, later known as "PODz", which materially improved the timeliness, consistency, and usability of HR-to-Pay reporting. He also played a key role in automating the HR Timeliness Report and contributing to the Pay Update solution, driving efficiency gains for the broader team. During this time, he quickly became our in-house expert in IBM Cognos, regularly serving as the go-to resource for complex reporting and analytics questions.

Alin initially joined as a term EC-03. Based on his performance, I later ran an EC-05 staffing process that attracted more than 142 applicants from across the National Capital Region. Alin performed exceptionally well in this competitive process, as anticipated, and was appointed accordingly.

In 2021, I transferred to IRCC and immediately initiated the process to recruit Alin to join my team there, recognizing the value he would bring to the organization. I subsequently managed him for an additional year at IRCC, where he continued to excel in a more complex and fast-paced operational environment. I later arranged for him to be shared across multiple units to deliberately broaden his exposure and round out his skillsets, an opportunity he embraced with maturity and confidence.

At IRCC, Alin was regularly relied upon to learn new lines of business quickly, often with minimal direction, and to translate that knowledge into practical reporting and analytics solutions. He supported the automation of key dashboards delivered to ADMO and contributed to the development and sharing of Line of Business KPIs that directly supported senior-level decision-making. He also expanded his technical toolkit by learning R, largely self-taught, and applying it effectively to real operational challenges.

I coached Alin through an EC-06 staffing process at IRCC, in which he was successful, further reflecting his readiness to operate at a higher level of responsibility. One of Alin's most remarkable strengths is his ability to independently navigate complex processes, probe thoughtfully, and guide his own learning without requiring constant intervention. He consistently met or exceeded expectations while maintaining a high standard of accuracy and professionalism.

In addition to my own experience supervising him, colleagues have consistently spoken highly of Alin. He is widely regarded as patient, respectful, and genuinely pleasant to work with, qualities that contribute to a positive and productive team environment. His calm demeanor, collaborative mindset, and willingness to help others have earned him the trust and appreciation of peers and clients alike.

In summary, Alin Sever is an exceptional public servant with strong analytical and technical skills, sound judgment, and a disciplined, self-directed approach to work. I have counted on him in high-pressure and ambiguous situations, and he has consistently delivered. I recommend him without hesitation for positions of increased scope and complexity, and I am confident he will bring significant value to any organization he serves.
